

Abstract

The purpose of this thesis is to try to provide comprehensive analysis of the recent legislation of contract for the assignment of a claim, compare it with former legislation, critically evaluate changes that new civil code brought to contract for the assignment of a claim and find solutions for selected legal problems that acceptance of current legislation brought to experts.

The thesis is systematically divided into seven chapters. First chapter briefly define the concept of obligation and is dedicated to changes in subject of obligations based on the will of the parties.

The second chapter analyses the historical development of assignment of a claim. In first part attention is paid to genesis of Roman law cessio, in later parts it analysis civil codes effective in Bohemia which contained legislation of assignment of a claim.

The third chapter is devoted to subject of assignment of a claim. It analysis what can be assign and what cannot be assign. Special attention is dedicated to assignment of future claims and assignment of group of claims.

The fourth chapter is devoted to contract for assignment of a claim. It analysis form of contract for assignment of a claim and essential aspects of this kind of contract.

The fifth chapter is devoted to parties of contract for assignment of a claim. It analysis their legal status, rights and obligations including responsibility.

The sixth chapter analysis legal status of debtor and means of his legal protection. In detail, it analyses notification. It solves questions like who is authorised to send notification, aspects of notification and legal consequences of notification. The thesis then analysis debtor rights to raise objections. Last part of this chapter analyses issues with multiple assignment of a claim made by same party and solution which current legislation brings to this problem.

The conclusion aim to synthesise pieces of knowledge gathered during working on this thesis.